Gillette is the global leader in male and female grooming products. It was founded in 1901 by King Gillette. Its products include razors and blades, personal grooming products, writing instruments, batteries, and oral care products. Gillette's global market share in the shaving market is around 65%.

Gillette's vision is to be a world-class organization with world-class people, products, and brands.

Gillette's mission is to be a global leader in the products it markets.

Gillette operates in 200 countries and has manufacturing facilities in 56 countries. Gillette makes a 5-year rolling plan which is reviewed three times a year and modified if required. A sales forecast is made every 6 months.

The business philosophy of Gillette can be summarized as follows:

1. Keep introducing new products. Fifty percent of the business must come from products that have been introduced less than 5 years ago.
2. Technical superiority in every product. Competition must act as a spur for customer retention.

Gillette's game plan is to do the following:

- Keep the user/customer at the centre of activities
- Provide improved products – gain increased net sales.
- Have pricing options by improving products

Gillette considers the following as its key growth areas:

Value addition in existing products; New product, speedy launches, distribution network, display and merchandising; advertising and promotion; keep a close watch on standard direct costs and post-marketing expenses, which can be considered as controllable overheads; synergy for efficiency and effectiveness; profits through IT-driven TQM and people's involvement.

Gillette has developed a marketing strategy for facing recession in the market. It views the impact of recession on different segments of the market as follows:

Consumers: Their demand reduces for non-essential articles and they switch to value-for-money products.

Trade: they suffer from inventory blockage of non-essential products and end up with heavy stocks of a variety of products.

Firm: It loses customers, as also trade/distribution channels, who show little interest in their products.

Gillette's policy for marketing during recession is that of pause! It believes in operating in the following manner:

- Basic marketing strategy does not change.
- Organize better management of resources and plan tactical moves
- Provide value addition; when consumers downgrade, Gillette provides added value to the product, reinforces advertising messages, improves the product package.
- Organize new product launches to increase user share and also upgrade the users.

The result of all this is that Gillette has grown even during recession periods.
